

Patronising

This is the main antagonist, Darius Sale. The way his posture is crooked and his generally facial expression look very patronising and menacing. His clothing includes very unusual colours that clash. This could reflect his personality because we see he is crazy due to him holding a gun. This gives character information on the audience.

Setting

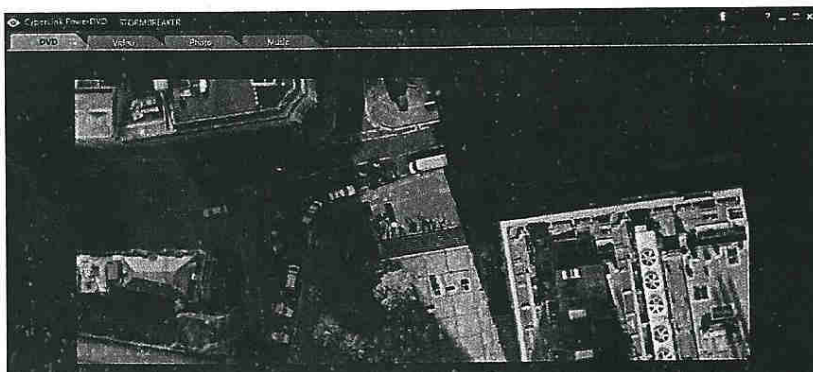

This screenshot shows the insane villain, reflected by standing on top of a building, holding his gun looking proud (body language). In the background you get hints of London (setting) and the mid shot shows the danger he is currently in, through showing the height.

The main feature of this screen-capture is the facial expression portrayed on the character Alex Ryder. It is very telling and tough which informs us of an upcoming, heated scene.

↑
good show?

In this screen shot there is a 'birds eye view shot' from the main protagonist's perspective. This shot is effective as it shows the height and danger the main character is facing. It also impacts on the audience because it makes them fear for the spy.