

The Big Raven, By: Emily Carr

Emily Carr was a Canadian painter who painted many landscapes in British Columbia, she was born on December the 13th 1871 and died on March 2nd 1945.

My Description

I think Emily Carr has used the elements of art, colour, shape, form, line, texture, space and value, so she used all seven of the elements of art. I think that the way the elements of art in the picture are represented, (to show the meaning and express the feelings Emily Carr had when she was painting it) show that maybe the message she wanted to pass on was that, even a raven can sometimes be beautiful and that everything-else can also be like that but only if you try and find the nice and beautiful side to it. Or she just wanted to show the beautiful landscape of British Columbia and to keep the Native American culture and enjoy it.

When I look at this painting it makes me actually realise how beautiful landscapes you can find in different regions of Canada. It also reminds me of when we used to go to public forests in Canada and we sometimes took walks there.

These are two photos of Emily Carr
