

This is my bird that I made in art. It took 5 periods to create it. We had to look for birds, then draw them. Then we formed it with the clay. We had to make a label again for the colours. So then we went to the kiln for it to dry. I like this piece because it took time to make it.

At first we got homework. We had to research which was looking at birds at our house or go to the park or find them in websites. At art we looked at a website for birds and I picked a yellow one. It was called canary. And I named him Canary. And I tried putting yellow dots on its head. When it was in the kiln it did not look so good but I liked it. The sad thing is, the beak broke.

I learned how to create it. Now I feel like I can make more birds and better ones. This worked because we had a poster which was called the design cycle: research, plan, create, evaluate.
